1532 State pension payments for women

Tabled: 4/09/23 Signatories: 1

Patricia Gibson

That this House notes with great concern that thousands of parents, mostly mothers, who took time out of work to care of their children have been underpaid their state pension as a result of maladministration by the Department for Work and Pensions which was first identified in July 2022; acknowledges that this error relates to those who claimed home responsibilities protection which was introduced in 1978 to protect state pensions of parents or carers before the introduction of national insurance credits in 2010; is concerned that this error is believed to be the second largest source of state pension errors after the underpayments scandal that has affected around 237,000 people, overwhelmingly women, who reached state pension age before April 2016; understands that this error arose because periods of home responsibilities protection were not recorded accurately resulting in those affected having fewer national insurance contributions credited to them and that those people have received a lower state pension as a result; is disappointed to learn that the DWP annual report and accounts 2022 to 2023 has warned that it could take until late 2024 before all those affected have this error corrected; and urges the UK Government to launch a public awareness campaign to ensure that all those potentially affected are alerted about how they can check their national insurance record and claim any missing home responsibilities protection credits so that they can claim the correct level of their rightful state pension as soon as possible.

Patricia Gibson

That this House supports the European Parliament's recent vote to support a nature restoration law, to place recovery measures on 20% of the EU's land and sea areas by 2030, rising to cover all ecosystems in need of restoration by 2050; is aware that a 2019 global study, carried out by the Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform for Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services, found 75% of the world's land surface and 66% of seas have been significantly altered by humans, while more than 85% of wetland areas have been lost; recognises that the EU's binding targets to restore degraded ecosystems are aimed at reversing what it sees as this worrying trend; is aware that, in the run-up to the vote, an open letter signed by over 6,000 scientists highlighted studies showing that restoring nature would improve food security, help fisheries, create jobs and save money, while opponents of the law not only lack scientific evidence, but even contradict it; notes with concern that the State of Nature Scotland Report 2019 concluded that, in Scotland, 49% of species decreased in abundance between 1994 and 2016; acknowledges that the Scottish Government's investment in biodiversity and nature restoration continues to grow, including through £250 million to restore peatlands, and through planting more trees than any other part of the UK every year, and urges both the UK and Scottish governments to emulate the EU nature restoration law by ramping up the pace of action to combat biodiversity loss, not least by introducing statutory nature restoration targets.

That this House marks the 25th anniversary of the 1998 Omagh bombing, the bomb planted by the Real IRA that killed 29 people including a pregnant woman with twins; remembers that a large car bomb exploded on a Saturday afternoon in the centre of Omagh, Co Tyrone, when the town's main street was crowded with shoppers and that more than 200 people were injured; notes that it has been described as the worst single atrocity in almost 30 years of the Troubles in Northern Ireland; highlights the independent inquiry into the bombing, which should bring some form of justice and, more importantly, closure to the family and close friends of the victims of the bombing; and further notes that neither those 29 people, 16 of whom were under the age of 25, nor the deplorable actions of the Real IRA, will ever be forgotten.
