Backbench Business

Financial redress for 1950s women impacted by Department for Work and Pensions maladministration of State Pension age changes

Rebecca Long Bailey [R]

That this House notes the Parliamentary and Health Service Ombudsman's (PHSO) report on Women's State Pension Age, HC 638, published in March 2024, which found that maladministration in the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) communication about the 1995 Pensions Act resulted in complainants losing opportunities to make informed decisions about some things and to do some things differently, and diminished their sense of personal autonomy and financial control; further notes that there will likely be a significant number of women born in the 1950s who have suffered injustice because of maladministration in DWP's communication about the 1995 Pensions Act; and also notes that, given the scale of the impact of DWP's maladministration, and the urgent need for a remedy, the PSHO took the rare but necessary step of asking Parliament to intervene, laying their report before Parliament under s10(3) Parliamentary Commissioner Act and asked Parliament to identify a mechanism for providing appropriate remedy for those who have suffered injustice.

Oral evidence taken before the Work and Pensions Committee on 29 January, on DWP's Annual Report and Accounts, HC 688
